CHAMPAGNE

Champagne is the wine of celebration, commiseration, racecourse success, christenings, wedding & seductions, making the perfect aperitif or after-dinner refresher.

There are many Champagne Houses, all making wine in their own style.

Most Champagne can be a blend of Pinot Noir, Chardonnay & Pinot Meunier, there are exceptions, when made only from Chardonnay the Champagne will be listed as 'Blanc de Blanc' Rose has become very fashionable in recent years, it's lovely salmon pink colour will enhance any party or celebration.

BORDEAUX

Our claret list is an ever changing feast, offering classified wines and those little gems from lesser known areas.

Bordeaux is the largest fine wine region in the world, it's great glories are it's fine red wines, together with a tiny production of wonderful sweet wines from Sauternes & Barsac.

Bordeaux is split between two main districts, on the left bank of the Garonne is the Medoc where the wines in general are Cabernet Sauvignon driven with a little added Merlot. On the right bank we have St. Emilion and Pomerol, here the wines are Merlot driven with varying amounts of Cabernet Franc, these are very general comments as in life there are always many exceptions.

White Bordeaux is undergoing renaissance, mainly because wine makers are now using cold temperature fermentation and new oak for ageing. MACON and the COTE CHALONNAISE

Lying between Beaujolais and Burgundy proper are the two regions of the Maconnais and Chalonnaise.

Both produce red wines from the Pinot Noir grape, and White, from the Chardonnay, as in the main area of Burgundy. No-one would pretend that they have the quality of the great wines from further north, but in view of the prices being charged there, it is necessary to look elsewhere for supplies of Burgundian wine. The Rully is particularly recommended; it has depth and richness well beyond its appellation.

RED BURGUNDY

Cote de Beaune

The Southern end of the Cote d'Or is renowned for its great white-wines-the greatest dry white wines of the world. The reds range from the delicate, fruity Savigny, through the powerful Auxey Duresses to the classy Corton, Pommard and Volnay. With Burgundy, it is the grower and the vintage which are all important, not the village name. Jadot is a top rank grower, and Ampeau is among the top negociants. We have tried to include wines from top, mature vintages as well as younger, light, fruity wines.

CHABLIS

Chablis is not White Burgundy, although it is made from the same grape variety, the Chardonnay. The area of production lies almost midway between Paris and Burgundy proper. The soil is entirely different and the wines should have more steel and freshness than wines from the Cote d'Or. Nevertheless some producers are attempting to make their wines taste like Puligny Montrachet by using lots of new oak. This is not always a success, as the oak can mask the flavour of the Chardonnay grape. There are many different opinions in Chablis as to how much oak should be used, if at all.

RHONE

The red wines from the Rhone valley are at last receiving the attention which they have so long deserved. The region can be considered as two separate areas, the North, which produces long-lived red wines from the Syrah grape, such as Hermitage, and Cote Rotie, , and to the South, which consists of a confusing and disparate set of appellations. The most widely planted grape is the Grenache but many producers are now using a lot of Syrah. However, this is an oversimplification; there are thirteen permitted grape varieties in Chateauneuf du Pape! All the wines benefit from ageing but for economic reasons many are either drunk too young or are vinified so as to drink earlier.

LOIRE

WHITE

The Loire is a long river with vineyards dotted down its entire length. Three different grape varieties are used. The Muscadet or Melon de Bourgogne makes its eponymous wine round Nantes at the South of the river. This is often thought of as the wine to have with shellfish. Some might prefer White Burgundy. Next along the river come Vouvray and Savennieres. Here the Chenin Blanc grape is used. The river then bends and runs South-North instead of West-East, producing some of the most popular wines of France. Made from the Sauvignon Blanc grape, they are crisp, dry and steely and have caught the imagination of the wine buying public.

ALSACE

Alsace is one of the prettiest, the most gastronomically rewarding and the least-known wine-producing areas in France. Lying on the lower slopes of the Vosges mountains, the vineyards attract a lot of sun and very little rain. Alsace has changed hands from France to Germany three times in the last 125 years. This has made for a winemaking and indeed food culture somewhat different from the rest of France. In Alsace the wines are named after the grape varieties and not the villages from which the wines come. The simplest of these is the Sylvaner, a perfect picnic wine. Next comes the Muscat, with its light, elegant floweriness. This makes a very good aperitif. Then the noble grapes: Gewürztraminer, spicy and perfumed; Tokay, more delicate, yet with great depth; and Riesling, which the Alsatians consider the king of grapes. The situation is further complicated by the fact that the Alsace vigneronns, like their cousins and rivals in Germany, make richer wines which are designated with different names by each house, so that the relative lusciousness of, say Paul Blanck is about equal to Trimbach's Riesling. Finally come the late harvest wines, Vendange Tardive and the rare Selection de Grains Nobles. These are made from grapes attacked by Pourriture Noble, as in Sauternes. In Alsace, however, they are never 'sweet' as they are in Bordeaux, but intense and rich. It is a pity that these wines are so difficult to sell as they are really delicious-why not try some?

GERMANY HOCK and MOSEL

The English gave the name Hock to German Rhine wines in the 19th century, when Queen Victoria popularised the wines of Hochem. The wines range from light and dry to rich and sweet; they are refined and long flavoured. The King of the grape varieties is the Riesling, which only ripens in the finest sites in good years.

The Mosel valley is one of the most northerly vineyard areas in Europe. The river Mosel snakes its way from Luxembourg to meet the Rhine at Koblenz. The banks are steep cliffs, like slopes of pure slate. This soil gives their wines unique flavour. They are flinty, dry to medium dry, low in alcohol and above all exceptionally grapey with a refreshing aftertaste.

A renaissance is taking place in Italian winemaking. Serious wines, both Red and White are being made. Because they contain foreign grape varieties, many have to be designated 'Vino da Tavola'. Some of the most impressive wines are coming from Tuscany and Umbria, where Chardonnay is now planted quite widely and new methods of vinification are being employed. Whilst every effort is made to keep current vintages up to date on the wine list, occasionally some vintages may differ to those on offer. If you are unhappy with any new vintage or grower offered we will be happy to change the wine for you.

It is our policy to decant any wine that we feel will benefit you and the wine from decanting.
